Doing Well While Doing Good

By Craig Janssen, Montana Broker
Successful entrepreneur and US founding father Benjamin Franklin was known for the quote “doing well by doing good”. At Live Water Properties we promote the idea that doing good for your community, wildlife and environment can be the most profitable way to do business. In a study from the Texas A&M Real Estate Center it is estimated that developing land for wildlife adds an average of $75 per acre to the overall resale value. Properties with exceptional wildlife and recreational potential offer a much higher increase in value.

Many of our friends and Buyers enjoy helping one or more of his/her favorite charities by allowing access. Worthy organizations like the Boy Scouts of America, Warriors and Quiet Waters, 4-H clubs and countless other groups enjoy special use for an area event. In turn the ranch owner can realize a tax benefit as well as goodwill from the community.

Selling or donating a conservation easement can be a good option for a ranch owner for generating income or realizing a tax reduction. Another creative means of generating income is through establishment of conservation (or mitigation) banks, which set aside larger blocks of natural habitat needed for long-term conservation. Instead of dollars in the bank, the "bank" owner has biological mitigation credits to sell to developers. Under state and federal laws, development projects that propose removal or harm to biological resources must assess the level of impact. If deemed significant, those impacts must be compensated. Setting up a mitigation bank can be complicated, however can be considered a good option for certain ranches.

The USDA offers a number of programs that offer ranchers and farmers an opportunity to increase profits by improving habitat for wildlife. The best known and most successful is the CRP, or Conservation Reserve Program. CRP was initially intended to help remove highly erodible land from grain production. In the past 20 years, CRP has morphed into dozens of smaller programs dealing with protection of a large variety of habitats. There are also any number of cost sharing and incentive programs offered through the various states and corresponding fish and wildlife agencies.

Whether you are a ranch Buyer or Seller, keep the concept of “doing well by doing good” in mind. You may be surprised at the number of ways to increase current or future ranch value, while preserving and enhancing habitat. Contact myself or any member of the Live Water Properties’ sales team to learn more about doing good for wildlife, the environment and your community while increasing your enjoyment and ranch value.
