Protecting Your Legacy Ranch With A Wyoming Dynasty Trust

By: Scott D. Weaver, Gonella Adamson, PC

For many, purchasing a legacy ranch is the culmination for a lifetime of achievement. Preserving that property for future generations means shielding it from family disputes, fractionalization, estate taxes, creditors, failed marriages, and/or imprudent management. While most states allow a trust to last for a few generations, a properly-drafted Wyoming Dynasty Trust, in conjunction with a Wyoming LLC, can protect a ranch for up to 1,000 years, safeguarding the legacy for many generations to come. As a leading wealth preservation and asset protection jurisdiction, Wyoming trusts offer enhanced protection against the creditors of beneficiaries and from divorcees. The Tax Foundation’s State Business Tax Climate Index ranked Wyoming as the best tax environment in the nation – due in large part to the absence of state income, estate, mineral, and other taxes for both individuals and trusts. Consolidated management and modern trust statutes allow for efficient management options that facilitate effective family governance planning. And, careful estate planning can shield the ranch, in whole or in part, from federal estate and gift taxation for the lifetime of the trust.

Fractionalized interests in real estate can be both the cause and result of family disputes, as members have conflicting views as to how a legacy property should be managed and used. Moreover, complex ownership structures complicate the management and sale of real property as owners may be spread throughout the country. Failed marriages, complex family structures, and creditors of an owner can further complicate matters. Ownership in a trust centralizes decisions regarding management and sale of real property in a Trustee, who manages property in the best interest of the beneficiaries. That Trustee may be an individual or group of family members or a disinterested third party and may be directed by a committee of beneficiaries, trusted advisors, or other third parties. As a general matter, assets owned by a trust have enhanced asset protection when compared against assets owned outright. Modern trusts contain dispute resolution and compromise-forcing provisions that greatly increase the likelihood that the legacy property promotes, rather than discourage family unity and governance, preserving the legacy for generations.

Many states still abide by the common law Rule Against Perpetuities, which limits the duration, and therefore, the estate and gift tax advantages, of a trust, to approximately 100 years. Wyoming, along with a few other states, has extended that lifetime to last for up to 1,000 years, shielding the assets from unnecessary taxation for generations to come. In order for real property to qualify for this extended trust duration, it must be owned by a perpetually-lived business entity, such as a Wyoming LLC, which is in turn owned by the trust. By transferring the legacy property to a Wyoming LLC, which is then owned by a Wyoming dynasty trust, one can maximize the value of the Federal Gift and Estate Tax exclusion and Generation Skipping Transfer Tax exemption while shielding the legacy property from transfer taxes for the lifetime of the trust. Furthermore, locating the trust in Wyoming further shields the asset from state income taxes, excessive filing fees, and burdensome (therefore, costly) compliance requirements.

Whether owning a legacy ranch or considering acquiring one, estate and business planning with Wyoming entities can help maximize the impact of the legacy property. To learn more about the wealth preservation planning opportunities using Wyoming entities, please contact:
